

"Introduction to active gel theory"

I will show how from general principles applying to weakly out of equilibrium systems one can construct a set of equations describing the physics of cytoskeletal filaments in the presence of molecular motors. Then I will discuss a simple example and compare it to the Frederiks transition in liquid crystals, describing similarities together with fundamental differences.

I will further show how these considerations may apply to tissue dynamics as well.'